The architectural drawings show a floor plan and a section of a building. The floor plan on the left depicts a large rectangular hall with a grid of small squares, possibly representing seating or floor tiles. To its right is a smaller rectangular area, and further right is a complex structure with multiple levels and rooms, including what appears to be a staircase. The section view on the right shows a vertical cross-section of the building, with a large, open space at the top and a series of horizontal lines below, suggesting a multi-level interior or a specific structural element. The drawings are rendered in a simple, line-art style.
